

Neil McCullagh is an Administrator and Lecturer at Boston College and the Founding Executive Director of the Corcoran Center for Real Estate and Urban Action. McCullagh focuses his work on community, economic development and housing.

"I produced Hellfighter with Ron Jones because we must communicate the history of segregation and de jure policy that harmed people of color throughout the 20th Century." "Hellfighter communicates the injurious housing policy and the pain of segregation and its long-term impact for one family, which should have known another path marked by the respect and gratitude due to a veteran hero."

This work provides a new and unique resource as a starting point for many discussions related to understanding systemic racism, diversity, equity, inclusion, de jure segregation, and the evolution of housing policy in the 20th Century.

Audiences could include middle school students, high school students, corporate training and engagement, university affinity groups, veterans groups, or community groups.