We brought The Black-Jew Dialogues to campus recently and it felt especially important, due to the current race relations in the country and especially at some college campuses.

The play was excellent, hilarious but also extremely educational and poignant at other times. The post-show dialogue with our students was the best way to end the evening. Our students would have stayed through the night talking if they could have.

They spent almost an hour asking questions or speaking their truths, and to see the trust and openness they had to discuss diversity and racism, which sometimes can be a very tough topic to discuss, especially in a room full of people you may not know, but to see the candidness of it all, was heartwarming.

This event is very important to bring to your campus and I hope to bring it back again to UWG in the near future.
