

To Whom It May Concern:

The Black-Jew Dialogue is a unique experience, using humor to push people to ask uncomfortable questions about themselves and their communities.

Iowa Hillel hosted a performance in the spring of 2015. The audience ranged from teenagers to folks in their 90's. All of them were laughing and thinking and questioning their own assumptions about identity and acceptance.

Huge success!

Hillel students were so excited by the Dialogue that they immediately began planning for a return engagement that could reach a bigger audience on campus. It's a program that can have an impact not just on the Jewish and African American communities, but on students from all backgrounds.

Highly recommended!
