

I am writing this on behalf of Lesley University Student Activities:

The Black Jew Dialogues is the complete package and a fantastic program for students.

There is a question that everyone in higher ed activities struggles with. How do we get students to come to an event that is educational? Ron Jones and Larry Tish seemed to have figured it out with The Black Jew Dialogues. The two clearly have improv comedy at their core and bring a thought provoking show about race relations to the stage, without losing their comedic roots. The discussion led by the two after the show allows students to open up to each other about topics that seem to be taboo on most college campuses around the country. The discussions that continue after the theater has closed are priceless in the residence halls and around campus. We have invited the Black Jew Dialogues back to campus several times, and will not hesitate to do it again in the future. The Black Jew Dialogues is truly the ideal "college" show.
